WIJEKLING, W. VA., DECEMBER 6, 1882. Settle the Civil Service Question.

'So far back as the session of 1825-'20, John Quincy Adams being President, the need of a better regulation of the civil service induced the Senate to appoint a special committee, of which Thomas II. Benton was chairman, to consider sundry proposed constitutional amendments looking to this end. The report of that committee, prepared by Mr. Benton, with some slight changes in amounts relating to the revenue, would stand for a correct and strong expe sition of the present situation.

There was a decreasing public debt and a growing revenue, and the committee foresaw that unless the revenues were reduced and executive patronage shorn of its evils there would be an increase in the civil list "beyond the power of the mind to calculate or comprehend." The revenue was then $22,000,000, and the fears of the future were based on an anticipated revenue of $50,000,000. Last year there was a revenue of over 400,000,000; the surplus alone was nearly three times the gross amount to which Benton looked forward with apprehension. The number of civil servants has grown to a hundred thousand.

Mr. Benton's committee expressed the opinion that "the exercise of great patronage in the hands of one man has a con stant tendency to sully the purity of our institutions and to endanger the liberties of the country." The danger is greater now with so much money in the treasury that the Government does not know what to do with it, and a force of civil servants more than three times the size of our standing

Nobody appreciates this danger more than the President ; and he asks to be relieved at once of his share of the responsi bility and the tax upon his time. At the beginning of the Government the offices were comparatively so few that it was not utterly impossible for the President to have some knowledge of the men who filled them. Now, the President is obliged to rely upon the represent tions of Congressmen and other ready volunteers, whose recommendations are not made in every case with regard to the greatest public good. It is not fair to the Executive to lay upon him a duty imposs ble to perform. It is not well for the coun try to place so much power in the hands of

There never will be a better time for a change. Public opinion is ripe for it, and the President will give his aid to such measures as will accomplish the result. The present Congress ought not to dodge the

At a recent army court martial in Detroit, while the officers were sitting with closed doors, the conversation ran toward literature, and among others the works of Pope were discussed. A very quiet lieutenant. who had up to this time said nothing broke in with, "Well, gentlemen, Pope's writings may be all right; but, will all due respect to the gentleman, I think his tactics are pretty confounded bad." Having been troubled with a very bad Cough for about two years and having tried almost every cough mixture that was ever made, I have found none that has given me such great relief as Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and I carnestly recommend it.
